NOTES:
BIOGRAPHICAL/HISTORICAL SKETCH

B.R. (Burr Redford) Callis (1891–1971) was born in Kentucky to Stephen Redford Callis and Carrie (Viores) Callis. By 1900 the family moved to Madison, Indiana where his father was a clothing salesman. The family returned to Kentucky in 1910 and farmed in West Milton, in Trimble County. By 1916 Burr had married Daisy J. McIntire and the couple had a son, Roger Burr Callis, born in Madison, Indiana where Burr was working as a grocer. By 1930 the family had moved to 3534 Salem Street in Indianapolis where Burr was living with his wife and son in the home of his parents and working as a sporting goods salesman. Burr and his wife remained in the same house until 1971. She preceded him in death that year and Burr died on November 28, 1971 in Plymouth, Indiana. He and his wife are buried in the Moffett Cemetery, in Milton, Kentucky.

According to a 1998 letter to I.H.S. Archivist, Pamela Tranfield from Jack E. Custer of The Egregious Steamboat Journal, Callis probably collaborated with William Hurley Ashby in collecting steamboat photographs as some of Ashby's photographs are in the Callis Collection. Ashby was also born in Kentucky and his father owned a steamboat, the Royal. Ashby later became a noted artist and photographer in the Indianapolis area in the 1930s and 40s. Newspaper articles in 1943 confirm that Ashby was Indiana's river authority and a collector of steamboat photographs and memorabilia. Ashby was also acquainted with Eli Lilly during the 1940s when Lilly was President of the Indiana Historical Society. Ashby served as the Chairman of the I.H.S. River Steamboats Committee and held that position until his death in 1948. It can be confirmed from census records that both Callis and Ashby were close in age, came from the same area around Madison, Indiana, and both moved to Indianapolis after WWI.

American river steamboats consisted of a shallow hull, simple cabin, boilers for steam, engines to power propellers or paddle wheels, with space for freight and passengers and a pilothouse. Types of steamboats included: side wheel, stern wheel, towboats that pushed barges up and down stream, ferries transported between shores; most common was the packet that carried freight, mail, and people.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The B.R. Callis collection contains approximately 1,644 black-and-white photographs of steamboats that sailed on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers between ca. 1860 and ca. 1940. Callis may have collected original images made after 1898; photographs made before that year appear to be reproductions. The collection was acquired in two batches, the first came as a donation from Eli Lilly in 1965 after he had purchased it from B.R. Callis. The second batch also came as a donation in 1981 from Callis' son, Roger B. Callis.

Most photographs show steamboats underway or at ports on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. The ports include locations in Indiana, Kentucky, Missouri, and Pennsylvania. A small number of photographs show men loading freight, and boats wrecked on sandbars and beaches. Images of steamboat captains include Gordon and Mary Greene (Box 9, and 19) and George Asbury (Box 15). The types of boats represented include showboats, towboats, packets, excursion vessels, and ferryboats.

Callis mounted the photographs on boards and often attached notes to the mounts regarding the history of particular boats. These notes often include; the captain’s name, place and date of construction, company responsible for operating the vessel, passenger and/or cargo capacity, and the size and number of boilers and flues.

Series 1 Steamboat Photographs: Box 1 to Box 2, Folder 1 contains images with two or more steamboats in harbors and on rivers. Each boat is named. Beginning with Box 2, Folder 2 and continuing to Box 22, Folder 1, the images show individual boats, each boat is named and in alphabetical order. When there is more than one view of a boat the processor indicates the number in square brackets. At the end of this series there are scenes of crews and passengers, views of Madison and Evansville shipyards, and non-Indiana scenes. The final Folder 6 contains unidentified boats.

Series 2 Manuscripts and Printed Ephemera: contains a catalog alphabetical index, likely written by Callis, of the photographs in the collection. The catalog lists the name of each steamboat, type of engine, and type of use, e.g. towboat, ferry. The series also includes a printed notice to passengers on the Queen City, and seven nostalgic poems about steamboats written by the following individuals: William Winters, H. Hyatt Washington, Verna Hopper, Claude McNeely, and A. L. Smith.

The series also includes a typed list of photographers whose work is in this collection, and a typed list of steamboats from Callis' index. These were generated by staff at the Indiana Historical Society.
