BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

The Capehart Corporation, also known as Capehart Automatic Phonograph Co., was founded in 1927 by Homer Earl Capehart (1897–1979) in Huntington, Indiana. Capehart was an entrepreneur who set out to create the Orchestrope, a coin-operated jukebox that could hold fifty-six records as well as play both sides of a record. Capehart found success with the Orchestrope which sold primarily to bars and roadhouses. In 1929, production was moved to Fort Wayne, Indiana.

In 1931, the Capehart Deluxe Automatic Home Phonograph was released in an effort to broaden their market and stay afloat during the Depression. Despite their efforts to branch out, the Depression took its toll on the company, and it went into bankruptcy in 1939. The company was divided and sold to other firms including RCA and Farnsworth Television and Radio Corporation.

Homer Capehart went on to have a career in politics, and was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1944, 1950, and 1956.
