HISTORICAL SKETCH

“INB National Bank traced its history to 1834 when the Indiana General Assembly granted a twenty-five year charter for the Second State Bank of Indiana. Twelve Branches were located around the state, including Indianapolis, to provide currency and short-term commercial and agricultural loans. The charter for the Second State Bank expired in 1857 and many of the same investors sought a charter for the third state bank, The Bank of the State of Indiana, which also had a branch in Indianapolis. In 1865, the investors of the Indianapolis branch secured a national charter under the National Bank Act of 1865; the new bank was The Indiana National Bank of Indianapolis.

The Indiana National Bank of Indianapolis, located at Washington and Meridian streets, primarily served small businesses and individuals in its first two decades of operation. The Tousey family owned most of the stock. George Tousey directed the bank while his brother Oliver concluded the affairs of the Bank of the State of Indiana. Oliver succeeded George as president, a position he relinquished to William Coughlen in 1876. In 1882, Volney T. Malott purchased Indiana National and became its president (1882-1912). Within two years, he moved the bank to 1 East Washington Street and expanded in customer base. In 1895, a massive fire destroyed the building.

In 1897, Indiana National opened its door in an elegant Neo-classical building at 3 Virginia Avenue. By 1912, it acquired Capital National Bank; at this time Malott became chairman of the board (1912-1921) and Frank D. Stalnaker (1912-1932) became president, a position that he held until death. Arthur V. Brown, a member of the Malott family, (1932-1942) then became president. During the Depression, Indiana National continued its conservative management and not only survived but grew by acquiring Continental National Bank in 1933 and attracting the customers of fail banks.

During World War II and the post-war era, Indiana National took advantage of the national economic growth. William G. Irwin (1942-1943), Russell L. White (1944-1952), William P. Flynn (1952-1957), Wilson Mothershead (1957-1963), and J. Kurt Mahrtdt (1963-1968) presided over the bank as the Indianapolis urban area experienced rapid growth. Indiana National reached out to potential customers by establishing branches, the first at Maple Road in 1947. The Bank also augmented its financial and customer base through acquisitions of other banks in the community, including Madison Avenue State Bank in 1948, Union Trust in 1950, and New Augusta State Bank in 1958. By 1968, INB was the first "Billion Dollar Bank" in town.

As evidence of its position in the community, Indiana National moved into its new thirty-seven-floor tower in 1970 at One Indiana Square. The new tower symbolized the soaring presence of Indiana National in Indianapolis and development of a corporate identity. In 1969, Indiana National Corporation, a one-bank holding company, was formed which allowed the corporation to engage in nonbanking activities. By the mid-1970's, Indiana National found itself over-extended in these endeavors. The Board of Directors chose Thomas W. Binford to restore the bank to a narrower, prosperous operation. Thomas M. Miller became president (1976-1979). Once the turnaround of the bank was achieved, Andrew J. Paine, Jr. became president of the bank and Miller chairman of the corporation.

The economic conditions of the 1980's contributed to a nationwide restructuring of banking. In 1986, INB began an aggressive program of acquisitions throughout Indiana as a result of legislative changes at the state level. Indiana National Corporation became INB Financial Corporation in 1989. In 1992, National Bank of Detroit Bancorp, N.A. of Detroit, a regional bank holding company, purchased INB and changed the name of NBD Indiana, Incorporated in October, 1993.”

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

General Information: INB archives contain material that provide a permanent record of the bank and corporation activities. Records were retained for their administrative value as well as their historical significance. The INB archives were organized by Weintraut & Nolan when INB Financial Corporation merged with NBD Bancorp, N.A. Noraleen A. Young was the project archivist. In 1995, materials assumed lost were found and the "Guide" was revised as well as new items were added.

Three factors shape and limit the archives. A fire in 1895 destroyed most official records of the bank. Officers of the bank recreated some of the documentation. Photocopies of items in other repositories have been included when available. Further, each department sets its own retention policy based on governmental standards, corporate policy, and departmental needs. As a result, some records with historic value are routinely purged and others transferred to the Records Center. Finally, an archival project was begun but not completed in 1982; it identified materials that could not be located in 1994.
