HISTORICAL SKETCH

In 1941, President Franklin D. Roosevelt summoned over 900 delegates of both professional and non-professional groups to the National Nutrition Conference on Defense. The conference's purpose was to discuss problems of nutrition that had developed out of World War II, and to formulate strategies of action. The last presentation of the conference charged the states to form their own nutrition councils.

At the conference, the country was divided into regions. Each region had a coordinator as well as a chairman to represent each state. Indiana was grouped in Region VI with Wisconsin and Illinois. Dr. Henry L. McCarthy was named the region's coordinator and Dr. John Ferree, Director of the Indiana State Board of Health, as Indiana's chairman.

In the summer of 1941, Dr. Ferree called on those in Indiana interested in health and welfare to create a state nutrition council. Over the decades, the council's committee and members developed numerous programs and activities to aid in the nutritional needs of Indiana. Initially, programs centered on the war effort. Priorities then extended to improving school lunch programs and keeping people up-to-date on current nutrition research.

The council has also lent support to many other local organizations, as well as other nutritional organizations. The Indiana Nutrition Council continues its same efforts today, holding regular meetings, providing seminars, and assisting with local food banks, among other activities.
