HISTORICAL SKETCH

The Indianapolis Medical Society (IMS) was founded in 1848 as the city's first local medical organization. With an initial membership of 21 physicians, Dr. John Sanders served as IMS' first president. A year later, the Indiana State Medical Society (ISMS) was established to serve physicians' groups at the state level.

In 1875, the Indiana State Medical Society recommended the merger of the Indianapolis Medical Society and the Academy of Medicine. Together, these two organizations became known as the Marion County Medical Society (MCMS). This name was changed to the Indianapolis Medical Society: The Medical Society of Marion County in 1902 (it would be modified a few more times before reverting to the Indianapolis Medical Society). The following year, ISMS changed its name to the Indiana State Medical Association (ISMA).

Both organizations are affiliates of the American Medical Association (AMA). ISMA is responsible for the coordination of AMA's programs at the state level, while IMS is responsible for the implementation of these programs at the county level. Such programs focus on professional development, health education, community outreach, legislative advocacy, and charitable giving.

IMS and ISMA are supported in these efforts by their corresponding auxiliaries: the Indianapolis Medical Society Alliance (IMS-A) (founded as the Women's Auxiliary to the Indianapolis Medical Society in 1926) and the Indiana State Medical Association Alliance (ISMA-A) (founded as the Women's Auxiliary to the Indiana State Medical Association in 1927). Both organizations consist of the spouses of IMS and ISMA members who work to serve the needs of physician families through fellowship, friendship and membership; to support medical education; and to protect the future of medicine through legislative advocacy. IMS-A and ISMA-A are also affiliates of the American Medical Association Alliance (AMA-A).

As of 2020, the Indiana State Medical Association is Indiana's largest physician organization. It has 8,200 members with more than 1,000 representing the Indianapolis Medical Society at the county level.
