HISTORICAL SKETCH

The Settlement Movement in the United States sought to counteract the wide class disparities of the late 19th century. Middle-class “settlement workers,” usually women, established settlement houses in which they provided vital services to lower class families. The Junior League was part of this movement, and its first chapter was established in New York City in 1901. The women of the Junior League championed voluntarism as a means to improve their communities, particularly in the areas of child welfare and education.

Ten women established the Junior League of Indianapolis in the fall of 1921. Those charter members admitted forty additional members at their first general meeting in March of 1922. President Charlotte Moxley recommended that the new chapter adopt a “main project” on which to focus their efforts. At the time, the Riley Hospital for Children was in its planning stages, and the League approached its chairman with an offer to help. The first major project of the Junior League of Indianapolis was to create, equip, and staff the occupational therapy department at the hospital.

Many more projects followed, and the Indianapolis chapter grew year by year, decade by decade, expanding its impact across the city. Junior League of Indianapolis members sponsored day care centers, performed puppet shows and arranged other theatre groups for children, staffed neighborhood health centers, served as museum docents, volunteered with schools for children with disabilities, and piloted many other important projects. In the 1980s, they sponsored a lecture series called American Dialogue, which brought nationally recognized authors, politicians, and child development experts to Indianapolis.

In the early 1970s, the League’s membership was transitioning from being mainly composed of homemakers to women working outside of the home. The “Professional Group” was formed to support those navigating a balance of home, career, and Junior League voluntarism.

To raise funds for their many activities, the Indianapolis League held special events like the “Number, Please” musical revue in 1936, balls, follies, a rodeo, and even an opera. In 1928 members created a used goods store called the Trading Post, later re-named the Next-to-New Shop, to supplement fundraising efforts. In 1971, the League held its first annual Holiday Mart—a pre-Christmas event featuring vendors of assorted goods. The Indianapolis League has also published two popular cookbooks: Winners in 1985 and Back Home Again in 1993.

Beginning in 1980, the Junior League of Indianapolis was headquartered in the historic 1904 Schnull-Rauch house on North Meridian Street. Long involved in historic preservation, the League renovated the house and made available for rent office spaces and other rooms. In 2009, the League sold the house to the Children’s Museum of Indianapolis.

The Junior League of Indianapolis proudly celebrated its 100th anniversary in 2022, and the Indiana General Assembly recognized its “significant social and economic impact in the Indianapolis community,” citing nearly 170 community projects and $11 million of overall donations to various community partners over its century of service.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

This collection has been divided into six series, and the original order (alphabetical) within it was kept wherever possible when the records were transferred from the Junior League of Indianapolis's (JLI) internal archive to this institution.

The first series consists of records generated by the administration of the Junior League of Indianapolis. There are minutes from the organization's board, the general meetings, executive committee meetings, and annual meetings. Also included in this series are materials related to strategic planning for the organization, early member portraits, and general images from the organization's photo archive.

The second series documents the work of various committees within the Junior League of Indianapolis, including anniversaries, administrative planning, admissions, financial, nominating, placement, public relations, transfers, sustainers, ways and means and more. Information on the JLI Trust Fund can also be found in this series.

The third series contains training material related to governance, leadership, and being part of a board or a committee that was used over the years to help support members as they cycled in and out of leadership roles in the JLI.

The fourth series contains documents and photographs related to all the different community-based projects the JLI has been involved in over the years, particularly their longest running ones like the Holiday Mart, the Next-to-New Shop, and the cookbook.

The fifth series contains information about the Schnull-Rauch House, a historic home in Indianapolis that the JLI purchased for their headquarters in 1979. The JLI used the home as their base of operations until 2009, when it was purchased by the Children's Museum of Indianapolis. This includes various legal documents pertaining to ownership, contracts for organizations that rented space in the building, and easements, as well as correspondence with the local historical preservation community, appraisals of the property and furnishings, and photographs of the interior and exterior of the home.

The sixth series contains JLI publications, such as their annual reports, the organization wide newsletters Pen & Inklings and Hotline and yearbooks (directories). Also included in this series is information about the JLI trademark, JLI informational pamphlets, and some assorted publications from the Association of Junior Leagues International.
