BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH
Norman Merrifield, born 19 August 1906 in Louisville, Kentucky, was the son of Clarence and Henrietta Merrifield. The family moved to the south side of Indianapolis, Ind., on 5 July 1913, where the elder Merrifield worked as a coal and ice delivery man. Norman attended Schools 19 and 34, and graduated from Tech High School in 1923.

Merrifield earned his BA in Music Education from Northwestern University in 1927. He taught school for four years and then went back to Northwestern for his master’s degree. Afterwards, he served as the Dean of the College of Music at Florida A&M. He returned to Indianapolis in 1933 and taught music at Crispus Attucks High School until 1967, interrupted only by his military service during World War II. During the war he saw action in France, Belgium, and Germany.

Merrifield married Estelle Perry in 1943. The couple had one son, born in May 1950. Merrifield was a respected member of the Indianapolis community. He published several musical works, including arrangements of “Somebody’s Knocking at Yo’ Door,” and “Ah Done, Done.” He was a member of Olivette Baptist Church and Garfield Baptist Church. Merrifield died on 3 February 1997 and is buried in Crown Hill Cemetery.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE
This collection is comprised of a cassette tape and a transcript of an oral history interview of Indianapolis music teacher and composer Norman Merrifield. On 9 January 1980, Florabelle Wilson interviewed Merrifield about his experiences growing up on the south side of Indianapolis.

Merrifield discusses his family and his father’s business, as well as his friends and church. He talks about race relations between blacks and whites and the negative impact that the rise of the Ku Klux Klan had on his neighborhood. He also discusses Crispus Attucks and the importance of the Baptist church in his life.
