BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Octavia Green(e) Landers (1905–1999) was born in Indianapolis, Indiana and graduated from Shortridge High School in 1922. After graduation she was employed as a telephone operator while embarking on a lifelong career in the playing and teaching of music. An accomplished violinist, she taught music in her home shortly after her marriage to Delver H. Landers on 1 September 1925 and left her job with the telephone company. Landers continued to give private lessons, expanding her studio to rooms in the Marion Building. In 1943 she began working for RCA in radio and engineering and thought of pursuing a career in this field. She applied to the engineering program at Purdue University in 1944, but left RCA and Purdue in 1945 when she was approached by the Indiana State School for the Blind to become a music teacher. Landers served as the music teacher for the Blind School from 1945–1960. While continuing to teach, Landers also attended Butler University working on her bachelor's degree in music, which she obtained in 1958.

Octavia Landers left her job with the School for the Blind in 1960 to accept a position as music teacher at Indianapolis Public School #45. She retired briefly in 1967, but came back for one more year in 1968. After her retirement, Landers continued to be active in the music community as well as taking up a new hobby in photography. In 1990 she moved to Eden, New York and remained there until her death.
