There are many kinds of railroad tickets: tickets good for travel in standard coaches and others for travel in sleeping and parlor cars; one-way and round-trip tickets; round-trip excursion tickets which sell for less than standard fare tickets; and commutation tickets for use in suburban zones of the large cities, good for 10 or 25 rides. There are also coupon tickets—long, ribbon-like tickets, sometimes two or three feet in length. Coupon tickets are made up of a series of “coupons,” or detachable tickets, one for each railroad over which the passenger desires to travel. Coupon tickets may also include tickets for station-to-station transfers, steamboat trips or side trips by motor bus. A long coupon ticket usually denotes a long journey.

If one boards a train without a ticket—as is sometimes necessary if the ticket office is closed or if one does not have time to purchase a ticket and reach the train—the conductor will collect the fare and give the passenger a receipt which serves as a ticket.

The Central Indiana Railway Company was chartered in 1875 as the Anderson, Lebanon & St. Louis Railroad. The line was mostly unprofitable so was sold and reorganized as the Cleveland, Indiana & St. Louis Railway in 1882. It was again reorganized in 1885 as the Midland Railway Company. A Chicago attorney acquired control of the line in 1891 and organized it as the Chicago & South Eastern Railway.

In 1902 it was jointly acquired by the Pennsylvania and Big Four railroads, and was incorporated 16 March 1903 as the Central Indiana Railway Company. At this time the railroad ran a distance of 127 miles, from Muncie to Brazil, Indiana. From 1976–86 the line became part of the Conrail system, but by 1986 only the nine-mile segment running from Anderson to Lapel, Ind., survived as the Central Indiana & Western Railroad Company.
