BILOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Born 17 November 1856, in Amyvale County in Monagham, Ireland, young Thomas K. Taggart (and family) journeyed to the United States where they settled in Xenia, Ohio. As a teenager, he worked at the Depot Hotel and restaurant in Xenia until 1875 then continued to work in the hotel and restaurant business in Garrett, Indiana, which was owned by the same company he worked for in Xenia, the N. & G. Ohmer Company. In 1877, he moved to Indianapolis and worked at another of their restaurants at Union Station. Ten years later he became the sole proprietor of the Union Station eatery and later served as manager of the city’s Denison Hotel. Hard work led to his proprietorship and managing of restaurants and hotels—ventures which made him wealthy. He owned and operated the Union Depot Hotel, the Grand Hotel and controlling interest in the Denison.

His political career began when, as a Democrat, he was elected (1886) auditor in the Hoosier capital and re-elected in 1890. He served as city, county and state Democratic chairman while fulfilling his duties as auditor. As county chairman of his party, he carried Marion County for Grover Cleveland (1888), defeating the locally popular Benjamin Harrison. He took the Indianapolis mayoral ticket in 1894 and the next two elections. As mayor, his public improvements and fiscal efficiency included the city’s purchase of 900 acres along White River, which formed the nucleus of an expanding park system.

In 1901 Taggart organized a group of individuals who purchased French Lick Springs Hotel where he served as president of the hotel’s governing board. In due course he bought out his partners and developed spas in the hotel which attracted many, as did also its illegal gambling, which was later outlawed. He also served on the boards of Fletcher-American National Bank and Indianapolis Light, Heat and Power; acted as treasurer of the Indiana Lincoln Union; and sat on the George Rogers Clark Memorial Commission.

In the winter of 1928–29 illness and surgery took their toll, silencing his voice and charismatic personality. On 6 March 1929, the Indianapolis News declared in bold front page headlines his passing in the capital city. Politicians and journalists both locally and around the country praised his contribution to society. Editorially the Indianapolis News on March 6, 1929 declared, “He was a shrewd and capable politician, knowing men as have few political leaders in this state . . . a real leader in the best sense of the word.” Surviving him were his widow Eva (from Garrett, Indiana) whom he married in 1877, a son, and four daughters.
