COLLECTION INFORMATION

VOLUME OF COLLECTION: 1 document case
COLLECTION DATES: Inclusive 1831–1957 (bulk 1831–54)
PROVENANCE: Thomas K. Warner, North Webster, Indiana, October 1957 and March 1966
This collection centers around the family of Henry Warner (1777 married, they lived in Mechanicsburg, Champaign County, Ohio. In 1832 they moved with their family to Cincinnati, and in 1838 (along with Henry's brother Warren Warner and his family) to Kosciusko County, Indiana.

The recipient of most of the letters in this collection was the eldest son of the family, Thomas K. Warner (1815–after 1885). He married Hester Ann Benford (d. 1905) of Elkhart, and they had six children. This was a religious (Methodist) family; Thomas was 'born again' at a Cincinnati revival in 1833. In 1851 he made a long trip to Iowa to look over land and consider whether to move there, but decided to stay at the 'old homestead.'

Another son, Henderson Warner, lived in Cincinnati. In 1847 he described how making a living was made more difficult because low wages were caused by the immigrants flooding into Cincinnati—people "from the dominions of the pope of Rome...From the bogs of Ireland and also from among the peasantry of England all who feel themselves honored to be in the employ of bisness or manufacturing men."

Lorenzo Dow Warner, a brother of Thomas K. Warner, lived in nearby Rossville, Ohio. In 1847 he reported that "Catharen is as plump as a patredge and ways about 100 lbs." Though she could not bear children, she is "tuff as a staddel and all to me that I could expect of a companion."

Ann Warner, a daughter of Henry and Sally, in 1840 married Samuel K. Young, a Methodist preacher. They soon moved to Iowa, where Young continued his preaching, but also taught school with other Methodists, and made bricks.

Another brother, George W. Warner, lived in Clinton, (Indiana?), and was apparently a Methodist circuit rider. The youngest daughter of the family, Serena, had mental problems and died in North Webster while young.

Thomas Jones, Jr., a correspondent whose relationship to the family is not clear, was a teacher. In 1849 he wrote wondering whether he was "a fountain of error" because his religious convictions were not clear; in 1851 he wrote to the school board in Warsaw about the choice of textbooks in English and grammar.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE
This collection, filling one manuscript box, contains correspondence, manuscripts, genealogical notes, and clippings, dated 1831–1957. It is arranged chronologically.

Folder 1 contains genealogical material, short autobiographical accounts, transcripts, and clippings.

Folders 2–8 contain correspondence, 1831–1957. The bulk of this material is addressed to Thomas K. Warner of Kosciusko County by his siblings and others, who were situated mainly in Cincinnati and in Iowa. The letters make it possible to trace family moves and relationships. There is considerable discussion both of land transactions and of family illnesses.

Folders 9–11 contain three notebooks of genealogical material, assembled about 1950 by a family descendant, a later Thomas K. Warner, of North Webster in Kosciusko County. The notebook in Folder 9 contains transcripts of most of the letters in the collection. The notebooks trace many of the descendants of the family into the twentieth century.
