BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Willard Ellis Harold (1902–1988) was born in Lafayette, Indiana. His father was a physician who died of tuberculosis two years after his son's birth. Willard lived with several different relatives in central Indiana while his mother worked in Canada. After attending high school in Noblesville, Indiana, Harold went to work on a ranch 700 miles northwest of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada for two years (1920–1922).

While working in Canada, Harold furthered his education by taking correspondence school classes. After returning from Canada, he worked for the Prestolite Company in Indianapolis for a short period of time. In 1923, Harold enrolled at the Cleveland Advertising Club's Advertising School at the recommendation of his uncle, Emmett W. Rutledge, who was also in the advertising business in that city. After completion of the course, Harold joined the Henry Packer (later Central) Outdoor Advertising Company where he worked as a representative in Cleveland, Richmond, Indiana, Chicago, and Cincinnati.

In 1942, Harold enlisted in the U.S. Army Air Corps and was assigned as a supply officer for a fighter squadron that was stationed in England, France, Belgium, and Germany, 1943–1945. Also in 1943, Willard Harold married Alma Barmes of Los Angeles. After the war, Harold returned to Central Advertising, but he left in 1946 and formed his own outdoor advertising company in Newark, Ohio, with the assistance of his wife. The Harolds continued to run their advertising company until their retirement around 1967.

Harold was an avid golfer and involved in several charitable organizations as well as serving as an officer in the Lions and Rotary Clubs.

Alma Barmes Harold (1906–1983) was born in Los Angeles, California and was a legal secretary for the chief counsel of the Automobile Club of Southern California prior to her marriage to Willard Harold. She later assisted her husband in his advertising business.
